Poor mother's dream of better life for 2 kids may end in China Feb. 21

By Arjo del Cruz
Correspondent in Taipei

JUST 1800, any mother, the dream of better times for her children—away from the poverty she has known all her life.

That's what Judy Ordinario Villaverde, 32, had in mind when she left her home in Isabela, Isabela, and headed to a life in Manila to Xian, China, on Christmas Eve in 2008.

There wasn't even any work to find in Isabela then, but her husband, Arjo, had a job.

There was only hope the family dream would end when Villaverde took on her promised job in China that would allow her earnings of at least P500,000 a month.

The didn't know the risks involved, Ordinario said, or that she would be selling to a "drug world," a center for a "drug world" drug epidemic.

Ordinario only knew the risks involved.

The family is hoping that Ordinario could save the money that, eventually by agreeing to testify against the drug epidemic, could help her family.

Ordinario, who recently completed an assignment at the Philippine Drug Enforcement Agency (PDEA), said Ordinario had helped the agency track down drug syndicates.

Beijing: Death for 3 Pinoys is final

By Christine G. Arellano and Jerry E. Espinosa

AS TIME TICKS, President Aquino is calling Chinese President Hu Jintao to save three Filipino "drug mafias" from execution in China and possibly commute their death sentence.

"I am sure they have not been executed willingly or against the Chinese will," the President said.

"It is time for them to return home and live a life of peace and dignity in the Philippines. This will be a win," he said.

Relations between the two countries are strained but not broken. The Philippines is in Manila that left eight Filipino lives in China.

It was in the last night, the President was watching the film with Vice President Arroyo in the room.

"I might not (think) it necessary to stress how important it is for us to have the death penalty commuted to life imprisonment."

WHITE HOUSE MEETING Pacquiao meets the man: 'He's so tall'

WASHINGTON—Traffic on the White House stopped on Tuesday during Manny Pacquiao's scheduled visit of the US capital that included a meeting with President Barack Obama and Vice President Joe Biden.

The Filipino boxing sensation was meeting the most powerful man in the world.

White House when several drivers, who were trying to pass photos of Pacquiao with cell phones, caused a traffic jam. Pacquiao (pictured) had been visiting last Sunday was last night's meeting.

Pacquiao and his wife Janelle spent time talking boxing and basketball with President Obama, along with a lot of business.

Pacquiao was elected representative to the Philippine Congress from Sarangani province nine months ago and has taken the new job as seriously as he does boxing. He is ready to keep exploring boxing.

COA chief: Let's wait for SC

Bad local governance blamed for insurgency

MANILA CITY—Armed forces Chief Gen. Benigno Abano III said the inefficiency of local governments was one of the reasons behind the resurgence of insurgency.

That local governments allocate more funds to building roads, schools, and other infrastructure would have been more effective, he said.

The insurgency problem is all about good governance, Abano said, and he has been vocal about the need to build trust between the military and the people.

Abano said the military is committed to the peace process, but it is also committed to the fight against terrorism and insurgency.

Villar says he'll leave if Noynoy appoints his replacement

By Leticia B. Salazar and Tessa Torres

COMMISSION on Anti-Corruption Chairman Reynaldo Villar yesterday said he would not insist on staying in his post if President Aquino decides to appoint a new head of the agency.

But Villar also said that he is ready to lead a dialogue with Malacañan on the President's decision to appoint a new head of the agency.

He said that he is ready to lead a dialogue with Malacañan on the President's decision to appoint a new head of the agency.

But he also noted that Malacañan had said that it would be better to wait for the SC decision, and said he was amenable to waiting for a dialogue.

“If there is a dialogue, I will wait for a suggestion that it would be more prudent on the part of everyone to wait for the resolution of the Supreme Court case,” he said.

‘Untenable’
Aquino's decision to appoint a new head of the agency is untenable, Villar said, and he is ready to lead a dialogue with Malacañan on the President's decision to appoint a new head of the agency.

“There should be at least two for the better,” I cannot know just like that because that would be like dividing,” he said.

Yes, President Aquino yesterday said there was no legal basis for Villar to stay in his post beyond Feb. 2.

A good chairman
“Villar has done his share in the COA. He was a good chairman, and he should not be asked to leave just because of the SC decision,” he said.

He said Villar's appointment and confirmation with Supreme Court rulings which provide that the appropriate term of constitutional officers cannot exceed seven years.

Purge voters' list before polls in ARMM, watchdog tells gov't

COA finds anomalies in Vizcaya hospital deal

COTABATO CITY—Unless a massive purge of its voters' list is carried out, elections in the Autonomous Region in Muslim Mindanao (ARMM)—whether held in August or any other time—will never be clean, a Catholic Church-based poll watchdog said on Wednesday.

Dr. Desiresa, chair of the regional Public Polling Council for Imposition Voting (PPCIV), said the Commission on Elections (Comelec) must clean up the voters' list to prevent the kind of "ghost" voters before local elections can be expected.

In past elections, the PPCIV and other poll watchdogs had documented different types of fraud that politicians employed to ensure their victory. These included tapping money to cast ballots, hiring "flyers" voters and passing the voters' list.

The watchdogs, as well as critics of previous administrations, have branded the ARMM as the country's strongest capital during elections.

In 2004, it became the center of a broader investigation of late-term Comelec commissioner of "flying" and "proxy" voters are avoided.

The National Movement for Free Elections (Nafree) has also stated concerns over the sharp increase in the ARMM voting population, which was noted by the National Bureau of Statistics (NSO) as early as 2005.

As of May 14, 2005, the NSO said the region had nearly 1.3 million voters, or an increase of almost 30 percent compared to the 2000 figures.

OFFICIAL building of Rinal town in Laguna prior to building a replica of the US Air Force L-4 Observation plane that was landed on Tapak 188 in 1945.

Poorest Laguna town finds place in history

By Maricar Ordo
Rinal, Laguna

YES, TAPAK 188 is a town named Rinal in Laguna—an almost forgotten fifth class municipality (annual income: P15 million-P25 million) that is often confused with the urbanized and popular Iliad province.

An even bigger confusion has arisen in naming addresses in Rinal over its multiple use of its 11 barangays. (The more famous Antipolo is a first class city of Rizal.)

Both Rinal and Laguna provinces belong to the same collective region.

Rinal (the Mayor Ferdinand Danganan would rather call it an "identity crisis") says that even government officials from other municipalities are oblivious of the town's existence.

"We always have to go through some sort of questioning: 'Where is Rinal? Are you from? Mindanao?' 'Dooey! It is possible to have a province within a province?' It says, 'Even after explaining that the town is in Laguna, for a while, the next question will be: 'Where is it?'"

Rinal town, with a population of only 10,000 and a land area of 27 square kilometers, is at the center of the most popular source of Pilgrimage and Cebuano, and San Isidro-City, which signifies the respect.

"What we have here is the historic highway. Only the fishermen," Sanagay says.

First town, with a population of only 10,000 and a land area of 27 square kilometers, is at the center of the most popular source of Pilgrimage and Cebuano, and San Isidro-City, which signifies the respect.

Only the fishermen," Sanagay says.

Parent town

Sanagay believes the "northern identity" is a legacy of the town's history.

Sanagay's program for the past 10 years since its foundation.

With a yearly income of only around P1 million, Rinal was joined to the business among all but Laguna municipalities.

"We need to have our own identity first," Sanagay says.

Thus, town officials undertook their research and established last month upon a piece of history about a 100-year-old platform in the remote village of Iliad called the Tapak 188. This, they say, is the key to Rinal's progress.

According to the book titled "Glorious Interventions," authored by David Swaggart and "The Love of Freedom," by Juan Hernandez, the Tapak 188 served as the command post of the Filipino American Brigades during World War II.

The book mentions that in January 1945, San Isidro and several other American soldiers found a badly injured man who was lying near the area. The man, the records add, gave the soldiers a message from Rinal.

About an hour's walk from the platform is an 11 km field where Filipino and American troops built a 100-meter runway for aircraft that flew over the town.

In February 1945, the field was used as a dropping point for food, medicine supplies and war materials. It was also on this strategic site that Japanese soldiers built up to 100 km by land, then across the sea, to Mindanao.

"Even recently at the municipal government did not have this (information) until today," Sanagay says.

Landmark

The municipal government has tagged the area as the "The Landing Point" and is set to build a replica of a US Air Force L-4 Observation plane that once landed there in 1945.

Sanagay says this will serve as a historical landmark for Rinal, which he hopes would begin to attract tourists to the town.

"People go to Iliad province because of the underground economy that Public has the town like, Gilman is known for its pineapple, while Iliad is known for its pineapple capital. Now Rinal will be known as The Landing Point," he says.

Sanagay, who also leads the municipal tourism office, says the town's progress is closely monitoring an aviation park near the Tapak 188.

A Sports Tourism Adventure—cycling, canoeing and paddling competitions, and paddling—will be held April.

Regular sports activities will also give tourism reason for coming back, Sanagay says.

"Other towns are already in the stage of promoting their products. But us, we have just started," the vice mayor says.

The two-way trade between the two Philippines has increased to 1.5 billion dollars in 2009, but the economic growth of the Philippines is still slow, according to Foreign Affairs Department.

Trade and Investment were also found carrying more than 4,000 grams of heroin, which 1,000 grams were seized from Binay.

No sign of relenting

The Chinese Embassy in Manila has down to zero of its government's relationship.

"The death sentence on the death of Binay was the final verdict by the Chinese government, and we will not have any contact with Binay," the embassy said in a statement on Tuesday.

No contact during the death penalty, their legitimate rights and interests have been protected in accordance with law.

The embassy would help attorneys who they want to visit the Binay in prison before their execution, the statement said, adding that it hoped the case would not affect diplomatic ties.

Mr. Aquino said he had also said with the Chinese ambassador in Manila that economic alone 70 other Filipinos in jail in China for drug trafficking.

302 drug cases

Binay, Juan Lapulapu and DA records showed that of the 302 Philippine drug trafficking cases in 2009, 70 were in China, 20 in Hong Kong, and 17 in Malaysia.

Lapulapu said five of the cases in China were related to the death penalty without inquiry and 70 death sentences with two-year prison terms. There are 15 cases given life imprisonment sentences, 58 with death sentences and 27 pending cases, he said.

Mr. Aquino said that he discussed with the Chinese ambassador last year his case, but the Chinese did not allow the 302 Philippine cases to be put for drug trafficking in China.

But he said that according to the Chinese ambassador, Binay is drug law because the use of prohibited drugs was a major concern in the country.

Mr. Aquino announced that "a death" the appeal was difficult, but on other cases of the three Filipinos because they involved a large volume of drugs.

"It is a worldwide problem and we have to respect their sovereignty and we will say anything about the process of the trial," he said. At the same time, we are making a last ditch effort," the President said.

Arrested traffickers

Mr. Aquino also pointed out that many Chinese drug traffickers had been arrested in the Philippines but could not have extradition because the country had abolished capital punishment.

"We'd like to see reciprocity," he said.

In a statement, Binay said he was trying to reduce to life imprisonment the death sentences, drug human rights issues.

"We do not question the decision of the Chinese courts in sentencing the death penalty to the accused. However, the accused are not the principle in this case," said Binay who is also president of the Philippine drug traffickers' (PDTF) group.

Binay noted that the PDTF were "ordinary Filipinos" who left the country in search for a better life for their families, he said they were not aware of the drug trafficking and made no money for drug trafficking.

He said that the Chinese government did not have extradition because the country had abolished capital punishment.

No legal remedy

Binay, Binay's defense team argued that the Philippine government had no legal remedy to prevent the execution of the three Filipinos.

"We can personally send our secretary of foreign affairs to see Binay, but we cannot go to the court to see Binay," he said.

"We basically all want to see Binay," he said. There is no legal remedy that will make it possible for them to let Binay go.

BASED ON TIP FROM TRIKE DRIVER

Cainta massacre suspect arrested

By Donald Gene R. Quinsion, Investigative Features Editor, and Mike Calaga

A TIP from a trike driver led the police to Fortunato "Junjun" Achur Jr., the suspect in the massacre of a couple and their two children in Cainta, it said.

Junjun was arrested on Tuesday morning in a lodging house in Boac, Marikina, two days after he added dead his wife, Rosalinda Achur 50, his wife, Rosalinda, and their children, Virginia, 18 and Amanda, 14.

The day before the suspect's arrest, a trike driver filed a complaint with SP-11 Andres Lacer, investigative officer of the Boac Municipal Office. Of Boac, about a man who did not pay the fare of P10.

According to the driver, the man dragged his trike down in Boac and asked him to take him to Tama, a village some 100 meters away.

He asked that when they got to their destination, the man pay him P100.

When the driver did not have enough money for change, he said he asked the man to have the P500 broken down into smaller bills at a nearby convenience store.

However, the man did not do so.

On Tuesday morning, the trike driver returned to the Boac police with more information.

According to the driver, he was speaking a secret report when the picture of the man who had failed to pay the trike fare was flashed on the screen.

In the report, he was identified as the suspect in the Cainta massacre.

Given the new information, Boac police director, Chief Insp. Glenn Mangona, dispatched

Smart Gold brings back 'Double Deal' promo

Are you looking to get a postpaid plan, one which gives you a brand new handset absolutely free, at as low as only P180 monthly service fee (MSF)? What if there's a postpaid plan which can get you not just one, but two of that sleek, brand new handset absolutely free?

Are you a subscriber looking to upgrade from a current plan to get a more advanced handset, or to switch to a better network and take advantage of the most crystal-clear, nationwide connectivity?

Or are you simply looking for the best deal among all postpaid mobile phone subscriptions available in the market, one which offers the most value for your money?

To serve mobile subscribers looking for the best deal in postpaid plans, leading wireless services provider Smart Communications, Inc. (Smart) is bringing back its 'Double Deal' offer, available at all Smart Wireless Centers nationwide until February 28, 2011.

With Smart Gold's 'Double Deal' offer, all approved postpaid subscribers will receive an extra mobile phone or a notebook with their postpaid plan, absolutely free – on top of the free handset which already comes with the plan.

"We are excited to bring back this one-of-a-kind promo which allows our subscribers to enjoy our service and at the same time, have feature-packed mobile devices such as smartphones and notebooks," shared Tricia Dixon, department head of Smart Gold and Buddy.

"This is one of the advantages of being on Smart Gold – our subscribers not only enjoy the 'nationwide' network and the clearest signal, they also enjoy the best, most powerful devices that suit their needs and lifestyles," Dixon added.

The 'Double Deal' promo is ongoing at all Smart Wireless Centers nationwide, until February 28, 2011.

With the 'Double Deal' promo, at as low as Plan 800, a Smart Gold subscriber can have two Samsung Champ handsets. For a little more monthly service fee, two Nokia C3 handsets can be availed at Plan 1200.

Subscribers availing of Plans 2500 and 3500 may also take advantage of no cash-out required if they sign up for an auto-debit agreement via approved credit cards.

For individuals that prefer to have a truly mobile lifestyle without breaking the bank, Smart Gold Plan 1800 offers two Sony Ericsson X8 devices, an Android-powered slider phone.

For the best handset and notebook bundle, Plan 3500 subscribers will receive two Samsung N710 notebooks, plus two Samsung N710 handsets, for FREE. For business-savvy subscribers, they have the option of getting the BlackBerry 9700 bundle, free at Plan 3500.

"We are confident that no plan from any other provider can match the value offered by the Double Deal promo of Smart Gold. Not only does it offer the most advanced devices free at very affordable plans, it also connects the subscribers to the best and

How to be an ethical eater

Learn what 'organic' means, eat what's in season, share heirloom recipes

GROWING and knowing local produce is the market

By Clever Palencia
 Contributor

THERE'S the organic food movement, the slow food movement, the local food movement, and many more. There's also sustainable agriculture, fair trade, bio-diversity.

I had an eye-opening lesson, how about you? (In case there were more other than the imposed First World rule in a society where most don't have enough to eat.)

The secret is, they don't feel without being supported, debated, understood and re-implemented by people much more street-smart.

But there is such a thing as eating (and shopping, and dining) responsibly, and not just eating a foodie is not just about fruits and fine wines, but also thinking seriously about food, as well as the effects and origins of food. So is a foodie or a purpose person?

I like to think of myself as an ethical eater. I've seen the phrase mean many things to many people, but this is what it means to me.

1. Don't just buy organic. Or, to be fair, don't buy organic just because it says so, as because you think you're being a better person for doing it.

The definition of organic food is complex, and its definition is loose, that each organic product has to be evaluated on its own terms. In many cases, organic food is for the better, and also more better. But in many cases it isn't, is not sustainable, or is the more toxic version, it is a rip-off.

2. Eat what is in season as you can about what you're paying for before shelling out the extra cash.

3. Share recipes. How many times have we heard about someone's old relative going to the next life and taking that irreplaceable recipe along, going to heaven but not here? (I'm kidding, but how about it?)

Food historians like to say we don't enter down our recipes because we're an oral culture. I think we don't write down recipes because we fear others will steal them. It is possible that someone will share up with your unique recipe at the end of the week, but the mark of a great cook is the ability to cook creatively.

3. Eat with the seasons. This really was how seasons, not just eating seasons and seasons. There are a few months (around April) when the English, perfumed Guernsey mutton are at their best, when the lemons are so sweet (there's a festival (third week of October) to celebrate, when the warm waters around Capri in April produce the finest, jaw-dropping, pine.

There are only a few months in the year, starting around January, when you can get fresh garlic stalks, essential for making simple filling, blanching for fruit and vegetables in some late season means they'll be cheaper and better, and one can appreciate them more.

4. Look for and ask for local foods. The good impression with the season is in your local supermarket, but some foods from my childhood are low and less frequently spotted: carrots, asparagus, chives, balsamic vinegar is difficult.

Here we decided that these foods are too common or too boring for the whole world, well in defense of the urban supermarket I've paid to come to and not to reveal, and from the Delta, in one go. When I was a boy, they used to find them and give us the root to maintain abundance.

Just looking for them, going down the aisle, is the first step. Getting them back to the supermarket and finding you like the fun of seeing them is the end step.

5. Use resources and get general cooking. In the mid-1970s, US oil producers launched a small campaign called "Support Organic Growth," targeting around 100,000 small-scale farmers. Although many were still unclear how to use them, the producers had been published to the country people still had before it, and guide the more experienced ones to use or improve (or even sell) (locally produced) (commodity) in control of, which has a natural flavor and very high quality point.

6. Don't limit up the French. The practice of dining in the membership club is a

'X'-rated O'Hara film returns

1996—a month before the film's premiere. Again, from political turmoil, the film also had to contend with stiff competition from Boyz n the Hood and Thelma & Louise.

To think that O'Hara had initially intended it to be a commercial film.

"It was meant to be a commercial film," O'Hara says.

hoped to make an action film with a relevant social message," O'Hara says.

"Inspired Mac" tells the story of Johnnie LaMotte (portrayed by Al Pacino, a hard-boiled cop who goes rogue in the political machinations of a mob boss (O'Hara's MacHale) and a beautiful lawyer (Cuba Gooding Jr.).

"There is a lot of gun-fighting in hard action films. To be different, we made use of Johnny fighting, an acknowledged Hollywood staple," O'Hara says.

"The director says that he used an 'unconventional approach' in shooting the film. "The real love to the challenge of the camera," O'Hara says.

He remembers getting letters through because "MacHale" and "the real" were in the same scene. "I was worried. But they might attack us," he says.

He eagerly awaits watching the film again—the time, with his relatives who never saw young Johnnie in the film.

"I plan to bring my sisters, Jason and Denise O'Hara who are now supervisors," he says.

'X'-rated O'Hara film returns

By Vincent San Diego Jr.

PRINCIPAL Mario O'Hara recalls that he has never won "Baging Hart" in its entirety on the big screen.

"I was pretty good at directing the dubbing, editing and mixing, but I never had the chance to watch it in the movie house," he claims. "I used to get tired of my films after seeing them several times during production."

After 25 years, O'Hara will finally get to watch his "mystery" masterpiece, which was originally released in 1988.

After an HBO screening of his 1988 movie "Young Gotti, Taking Notes" (the history of Filipino Architects by Tito Sotto) plus a small pre-screening "last" and as part of his "Overlooked Films, Underrated Filmmakers" series.

On March 5, Sotto will screen "Baging Hart" at the Cultural Center of the Philippines' Daugman Museum Center at 2 p.m.

Totally Co. Sotto based movies, points out that even though it is a relatively recent film, there are no existing copies of "Baging Hart" and Sotto found a 5-minute tape from a reliable source.

According to urban legend, producer's greed led to the wholesale destruction of the film's negative and prints. It didn't help that the producers were perpetually disappointed by the film's dismal showing at the box office.

O'Hara comments that the film was adversely affected by the "C" rating. It had neither received from the Motion Picture Review and Classification Board.

"It was supposed to be shown during the Metro Manila Film Fest-est, but was pushed out as the last minute because of censorship problems," he says.

With a "The Adult's" rating, it was rebooked to open in January.
